Junior meeting positive

It appears Vernon will have a franchise in the B.C. Junior Hockey League during the 1981-82 season.

Vernon's Director Al Thomas told the Daily News a meeting Tuesday night to assemble a group of owners went well.

"It looks promising," Thomas said. "The situation is certainly much more positive than a few days ago."

BCJHL Past-president Vern Dye and Thomas are attempting to form a local ownership group consisting of about 10 men.

Thomas said, "There were eight men at the meeting Tuesday and we've got another meeting with some people today."

Lakers finished last in the five-team BCJHL Interior Division during the 1979-80 season. The club also did poorly at the gate, rarely attracting more than 300 fans.

40 arm wrestlers compete in meet

Vernon's National Hotel hosted an arm wrestling meet, sanctioned by the British Columbia and Canadian Arm Wrestling Associations, Tuesday night.

Current national middleweight champion Andy Elliott and B.C. heavyweight champion Tom Hollesen, both of Williams Lake, acted as referees.

About 40 people competed in nine classes. Elliott told the Daily News he was pleased with the turnout. "We held about 60 contests a year, but not many in the Okanagan," he said. "Next time we come here, I'm sure the response will be even better."

Elliott won his first arm wrestling meet more than five years ago in Ashcroft. "I was living in Spences Bridge at the time and was the unofficial champion of that area," he said. "When I won the title in Ashcroft, I started getting offers to compete all over the province."

Main difference between arm wrestling, and its more popular counterpart wrist wrestling, is that combatants stand while competing.
